Unlocking the Potential of Migrants in Europe: From Isolation to Multi-level Integration

Overview

Over the last few decades, international migration and globalisation have influenced the public policy agenda across Europe and the wider world. In Europe alone there has been a steady increase in the flow of resident immigrants. Eurostat figures suggest there were 33.3m foreign citizens resident in the EU-27 in 2011, representing 6.6% of the total population, with the majority (20.5m) being citizens of non-EU countries.

Immigration has an important role to play in addressing the EU's future challenges, such as demographic changes and labour shortage. Thus, the complexities of migration and integration, and its impact on the EU economy and on the public policy of individual Member States, need to be approached in a more comprehensive and sustainable manner.

The Commission's 2005 Common Agenda for Integration has helped to implement the Common Basic Principles, agreed in 2004, which underline the importance of a holistic approach to integration and assist EU States in formulating integration policies. EU policy here has been further framed by the 2009 Stockholm Programme and the Europe 2020 Strategy, where one of the headline targets is to raise the employment rate of 20-64 year olds in the EU to 75%. One of the means by which to do this is by better integrating legal migrants.

In July 2011, the Commission proposed a European Agenda for the Integration of Non-EU Migrants, focusing on action to increase economic, social, cultural and political participation by migrants and putting the emphasis on local action. This new agenda highlights challenges that need to be solved if the EU is to benefit fully from the potential offered by migration and the value of diversity.

Migrants actively contribute to the economic, social and cultural development of European societies. Their successful integration into society in the host country is key to maximising the opportunities of legal migration and making the most of the contributions that immigration can make to EU development. Member States should empower communities, NGOs and relevant agencies at national and regional level to promote and foster discussion and cultural exchange.

This timely international symposium provides an invaluable opportunity to discuss the current challenges of migration and integration in Europe, and to reignite the debate about an EU-wide strategy to improve integration policies across Member States. The symposium offers a platform for the discussion of a better European regulatory framework, supports the exchange of ideas and encourages delegates to engage in thought-provoking topical debate whilst sharing best practices and lessons learnt.

“Migrants can make very powerful contributions to our societies. But these contributions can only be made if we are ready to recognize and use the potential of migration...”

- Cecilia Malmström, EU Commissioner, October 2013

“...Efforts should be focused on measures that provide the largest pay off, notably language and professional training, and on the most vulnerable groups, such as young migrants. International migration flows are essential for the effective functioning of our economies...”

- Angel Gurría, OECD Secretary-General, June 2013
